

WOMEN SLUMP FOR YEAR WORK

The building record for the year ended last month was $1,224,032.10, or nine months of this year's building work has reached a total of only $576,512. While there were three months to go on Inspector Lindros said that he does not expect an average outlay of over $15,000 for each of these months, or a total of $45,000 in addition to the record thus far, which would make a few thousand dollars more than one-half the 1919 record.

The slump in building work this year came on fast after labor troubles began last April. However, other conditions are said to be as much to blame for a slump building as labor difficulties. Banks cutting down on loans for speculative building purposes is said to have been a big factor in reducing the amount of work that had been planned.

Month's Records Tell Tale.
 The building records by months for the year are: January, the total outlay was $26,700. February showed an increase, the amount expended during that month reaching $30,845. March was better with a record of $30,408, while April passed the banner month of the year with a total outlay of $129,001. Strikes started at this time and in May the record slumped to $100,260. The lowest mark was in June, with a record of only $20,542. In July the record was $30,274. August was a better month with a record of $35,724, and September furnished a total of $62,847, amounting to bear out contentions that there would be a fall increase. However, the September growth came up in the first two weeks. From then the amount of new work started on the toboggan, and the first two weeks of this month have almost convinced the most optimistic that there is practically no hope for a big showing in new work this fall.

The first week of this month Inspector Lindros issued 24 permits for work estimated to cost $6,480, while during the last week only nine permits were granted for work estimated to cost $2,576.

Of the last permits issued five were for garages, one for an addition to a shop, one for remodeling

- a more building, also the remodeling a dwelling and one for a partition.
